

ECZEMA SPREAD TO FACE AND NECK

And Ears, Itched and Burned So Scratching Made Sores. Great Disfigurement and Pain. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

R. F. D. No. 2, Enosburg Falls, Vt. —

"My eczema began by a pimple on my chin. It then spread to my face and neck and ears. The pimples were small and they itched. The eczema itched and burned so I scratched and made raw sores. On account of the irritation I could not sleep much. It caused great disfigurement and it caused pain."

"I underwent two treatments but they failed to help me so I took two bottles of blood purifier but got no help. The trouble had lasted about two months. I then thought I would try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. After using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment a week my eczema began to heal. I washed the eczema with the Cuticura Soap and then put on the Cuticura Ointment. One cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment cured me and at the end of five weeks I did not have a scar." (Signed) Miss Mabel Gilman, May 2, 1913.

It costs nothing to learn how pure, sweet, effective and satisfying Cuticura Soap and Ointment are in the treatment of poor complexion, red, rough, itching scalp, dandruff, dry skin and falling hair, because you need not buy them until you try them. Cuticura Soap 25c. and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 50-pc. Skin Book. Address—Post-office box 378, Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston.

378 Main Wholesale and Shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Saved by Busting Bottle.

The bursting of a bottle of soda water saved by the family of Mr. J. G. Grant, who reside in Silver street, Colchester, England, from death by fire. A loud report awoke the occupants of the house in the early hours of the morning. There was smoke in the rooms, and a search revealed the fact that an oven beam beneath a bedroom floor was on fire. The soda water bottle which acted as a fire alarm had been placed on a shelf near the beam, and had exploded when it became hot.

FILIBUSTER AGAINST REPEAL BEGUN

Opponents of Bill Prolong Debate Over Trivial Matters—President Believes Action of Baltimore Convention Was Ill-Considered—Is Assured of the Support of 200 Democrats and Many Republicans, It is Said.

Washington, March 23.—President Wilson declared today that in seeking the repeal of the Panama tolls exemption he did not wish to ask that the nation do that which was bound in honor to do, but was going the way of the majority in the democratic party. He pointed out that when the Panama canal act was passed, a majority of the democrats then in the house of representatives voted against the tolls exemption and that only by a coalition of a minority of democrats with a number of republicans did the measure become law.

This announcement was taken in administrative circles as the president's answer to the argument that the Baltimore platform made the tolls exemption a more deliberate consideration. The president is understood to believe that the majority opinion of the democrats in the house, as last expressed, was a result of a more deliberate consideration of the question than was possible at the Baltimore convention.

Signs of Filibustering. The president made no secret to callers as to his anxiety to have repeal measures passed. Asked if he thought influences were at work to prolong debate unnecessarily, Mr. Wilson said he did not know, but it certainly appeared to him as if there had been some filibustering that minorities always filibustered and disclosed themselves in filibustering.

The president is confident that he will have the majority of his party behind him in the house when the repeal comes to a vote. He has been assured that at least 200 democrats and many republicans will support him. Senator James of Kentucky has informed the president that the vote in the senate would be at least 58 to 24 in favor of the repeal.

Suggestions of "Gag Rule."

There seemed little prospect tonight of getting the Sims repeal bill before the house until late in the week. Debate on the rivers and harbors appropriation bill is dragging along slowly with no prospect of immediate conclusion. Today the speaker's effort of members to prolong discussion of trivial matters brought constant references by champions of the toll exemption repeal to filibustering tactics. No attempt will be made to report.

"Am I addressing the lady of the suite?" he asked in a mild tone. The lady of the suite flushed somewhat guiltily. She was only 18 and seemed unreasonably small for her years. "Perhaps you didn't notice the card in the lower hall," she said with a touch of asperity in her tone, and yet the tone was strangely childish. "That's quite accurate," she said. "I'm just a plain stranger lost in a strange flat." He consulted a card. "I'm looking for Mrs. Arthur Haines," whose maiden name was Abby Sloane—daughter of John and Lydia Dunham Sloane, who resided for many years in Fairgrove, Ohio.

"That's quite accurate," she said. "I am the lady. What is it, special delivery?" He answered her with a sudden grin. "Won't you take me in? I'm your cousin."

The child woman looked at him anxiously, with her head a little on one side. "How distant?" "Oh, third, fourth, or fifth." She shook her head. "It doesn't seem reasonable that a fifth cousin would take such a lot of trouble to look up his poor relatives." "It doesn't seem reasonable," he replied, "that a cousin of any degree would keep one of her own blood cooling his heels on her doorstep!"

He had a pleasant smile, and somehow her childishness and quaintness kept him smiling. "If you have a few relatives," he said, "that I'm inclined to hold fast to all I can find. Besides, I promised my father I would hunt up each of them—it was one of his last requests."

She was silent for a moment, her bright eyes studying his face. "We can't give you much of a welcome, cousin," she said. "You see, we live, just two rooms. Nice rooms, too. All we need, of course, but not intended for entertaining. You don't mind the big apron, do you?" "I like it," he quickly answered. "You look like the little princess in the fairy tale."

a rule that would limit debate on the repeal bill to fifteen hours until the measure actually has been called up and this probably cannot be done until Thursday, when Majority Leader Underwood is to make the opening speech in opposition to the repeal. Representative Murdock, the progressive leader, urged today that if the house would limit the repeal discussion to forty instead of fifteen hours, sentiment on the tolls issue would be so shifted that the vote would result in America's way instead of England's. Several suggestions of "gag rule" were made, but Minority Leader Mann declared that while he had heard it reported that the White House had sent word to hasten the repeal, he did not believe the president had attempted to interfere with house procedure.

Progressives Not Interfered. That all progressive party members of the house are not opposed to repeal of toll exemption was disclosed today when Representative Charles M. Thompson of Chicago issued a statement declaring his intention to support the president's intention to support the repeal.

Representative Chandler of New York, also a progressive member, supplemented the recent statement of his party leader in the house, declaring his opposition to the repeal "because I believe that a political platform is a covenant with the people, and it is to be loyally observed and faithfully executed by representatives of the people."

Senator O'Gorman, who is fighting early and late against the administration's repeal policy, said today that the committee on inter-oceanic canals would act on the repeal bill in due time, but reiterated his statement that the committee would not meet until the resolution returns from South Dakota.

Resolution of Protest.

In the senate today Senator Thornton of Louisiana, a member of the canals committee, who has announced that he will support the president in the tolls controversy, submitted a resolution on inter-oceanic canals would act on the repeal bill in due time, but reiterated his statement that the committee would not meet until the resolution returns from South Dakota.

full face. The new cousin opened the door and went in. "If you are 'Arthur Haines,' he said, 'I'm your wife's cousin. How are you?' And he gripped the young man's hand. "I'm Arthur Haines," the young man replied, "but I didn't know my wife had a cousin."

"People can have cousins without boasting of them," he said. "I'm a first, not even a second, but I'm a perfectly good cousin for all that. Your wife admits it, and so you'll have to make the best of it. I'm going to be around until you close up, and then I'm going home with you to dinner."

"I'm going," the young man echoed. "Doesn't Abby know?" "Of course she knows. I told her. When six o'clock came the clerk locked up the store and they started for the flat."

"I always walk," said the clerk. "I need the exercise—and save the car fare." They turned the corner onto the main street. "Don't be offered to," he added, "at what I'm going to say. You have a well-to-do look and maybe" you intend to give Abby something—I'm only surmising, this, you understand. Anyway, don't give her money. It would be just like her to rush out and buy a lot of foolish things for me. She thinks I'm always needing something. She isn't to be trusted, you see."

The new cousin slipped his arm through the little wife's, and lolled there was the child-wife in a white frock, with a fluffy little white cap, and there was the very small table, very clean and white, and an appetizing odor was arising from the tiny stove in the corner. It was quite true the dishes didn't match, and the tablecloth was just a little wobbly, and the stove was almost too near—yet the new cousin enjoyed every feature of the meal. "From market direct to consumer," she cried as she put the steaming cup before him. "Fifth soup!" laughed the new cousin.

"Oh, you remember that, do you?" she cried. "Well, keep your courage up, for hope's not far away."

The new cousin held up his fork. "I hope to be your guest many times, of course you can put me up for the night."

The face of the young husband grew very red, but the girl-wife only shook her head and said, "Have two."

"Cousin," she said, "you are a beautiful bluffer. You don't really want to sleep on the fire escape, do you?" "Not too fast," said the new cousin. "You have no justification for turning the stranger from your door. If I waive my rights on this occasion it mustn't happen again."

"Have another doughnut, Dunham," said the child-wife. He drew a folded paper from his inner coat pocket. "Where's the applause?" The child-wife clapped her hands faintly. She was a little worried. This wasn't all play. The young husband leaned forward. Dunham began to read.

My son, Dunham, is empowered and directed by me to cause such inquiry to be made as will lead to the locating of the living persons of his blood, on both the father's and mother's side. He is further empowered and directed to take such means and measures to better their conditions as his judgement may direct. This he will do in full compliance with my wishes, and in lieu of testamentary details."

He paused and refolded the paper. "This is a copy of one section of the original document," he explained. The child-wife stared at him. "It sounds very serious, cousin," she said. "What does it mean?" He suddenly laughed. "Come a little closer, babies," he said, "I'll listen to the wicked uncle. It means a home, a real home, just the kind of home that is worthy of a wife who knows the way to brighten it. It means shoes and hats and coats. It means a better position for a young husband. It means a bigger stove, and a bigger table, but no bigger hearts, no bigger love, nor faith, nor hope, nor doughnuts."

He ended his speech with a quick laugh. He saw that the child-wife was on the verge of tears. "Abby called you Dunham," said the young husband. "Is—is that your name?" "My name is Dunham Greer," replied the new cousin. "It was a part of my dead father's will that I read to you."

"Greer?" half laughed, half cried the little wife. "Why, I've heard my mother speak of her cousin, Greer, the railroad king, many many times. It's true, Artie, it's true! We simply must sleep on the fire escape tonight!"

The young husband gently put his arm around her. "Oh, you babies in the flat," laughed the new cousin.

SOAP ON HAIR CAUSES DANDRUFF, SCALP GETS DRY, HAIR FALLS OUT

GIRLS! GET A 25 CENT BOTTLE AND TRY A "DANDERINE HAIR CLEANSER." After washing your hair with soap always apply a little Danderine to the scalp to invigorate the hair and prevent dryness. Better still, use soap as sparingly as possible, and instead have a "Danderine Hair Cleanser." Just moisten a cloth with Danderine and draw it carefully through your hair, taking one strand at a time. This will remove dust, dirt, and excessive oil. In a few moments you will be amazed, your hair will not only be clean, but it will be wavy, fluffy and abundant, and possess an incomparable softness and lustre. Besides cleansing and beautifying the hair, one application of Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating and life-producing properties cause the hair to grow long, strong and beautiful. Men! Ladies! You can surely have lots of charming hair. Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and try it.

"CASCARETS IF HEADACHY" BILIOUS, SHAKY, CONSTIPATED—DIME A BOX

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged, constipated bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel.
